About These Materials:

The Rhode Island Historical Society, in partnership with the Rhode Island Black Heritage Society and the Rhode Island Historical Preservation and Heritage Commission, was awarded a grant from the National Park Service* for a multi-phase project on African Americans’ Struggle for Civil Rights in Rhode Island: The 20th Century. The project consisted of conducting archival research, collecting oral histories, and documenting places of significance to civil rights in Rhode Island over the course of three years. Public exhibits and school unit plans were also created thanks to this grant.

The following lessons use many types of primary sources from local, Rhode Island collections and some created for this project, including oral history audio clips, video clips, and documents. These lessons are meant to serve as supplements to the Civil Rights history already being taught in classrooms with a focus on local events and people. This set of lessons highlights school protests that occurred in the 1960s, 70s, and 2010s right here in Rhode Island.

The lessons are not designed to be used in lecture-style teaching or as independent homework assignments. The lessons use collections of primary and secondary sources with guiding questions and graphic organizers to help students analyze the sources and gather their thoughts to be used as points of class discussion, either in groups or as a whole class. Some of the questions ask students to formulate and back-up their own thinking. As such, there may not be right or wrong answers, and students should be encouraged to listen to and consider the perspectives of their peers.

Learning Objectives:

Students will evaluate and analyze sources to gather historical information which will inform their own decisions and arguments

Students will make connections between the participation of young people in Rhode Island during the Civil Rights era to actions their peers are taking today

Students will draw conclusions about their own understandings of current issues in their lives and will think about what types of civic action they can take to move towards resolving those issues

Definitions:

Broadside—poster or advertisement often used in the 1700s and 1800s US

De facto segregation—Refers to the separation of races. This can occur in schools, in neighborhoods, in employment, and elsewhere. “De facto” means “by fact.” It is compared to “de Jure” segregation, meaning “by law.”

Discrimination—the unjust or unfair treatment of different categories of people, especially on the grounds of race, age, or sex.

Ethnicity—affiliation or connection to a particular nationality or culture.

Negro—a term used to describe people of African descent or with dark-colored skin. During the Civil Rights Movement, this word was used often whereas it is now considered disrespectful to use this word. However, some people still self-identify with this term. You may also come across the terms African American, black, person of color, colored person, or colored when looking at or listening to primary documents.

Oral History—the collection and study of historical information using sound recordings of interviews with people having personal knowledge of past events.

Prejudice—opinions and assumptions, usually about a group of people, not based on reasons or actual evidence.

Race—Grouping people together based on physical or other attributes. Skin color is an example.

Segregation—keeping people or things apart based on difference; segregation in housing practices kept black and white families living in different neighborhoods.
Lesson 1: Issues of Race at Central High School in the Early 1970s

In 1967, the mayor of Providence, Joseph A. Doorley, Jr., formed a committee to try to solve the issue of de facto segregation in the public schools. Since the schools were neighborhood schools, and neighborhoods were segregated due to housing discrimination, neighborhood schools also found themselves segregated. The committee proposed re-assigning black students to schools that had a majority of white students and re-assigning white students to schools that had a majority of black students rather than having all students attend their neighborhood schools. This was called the Providence Plan. Providence’s high schools were desegregated according to the Plan by the start of school in 1971. Students from the predominantly white Italian neighborhood of Federal Hill and students from the predominantly black neighborhood of South Providence attended Central High School together. In early October, racial disturbances caused by conflicting students forced the school to close for a week. As you will read, officials and the media disagreed whether the new Providence Plan contributed to racial tensions that led to the student conflict. The documents, articles, and films below center on that conflict. What conclusions can you make based on the primary sources below? What other information about the incidents can be gleaned from these sources?

Racial Conflict Closes Down Central High

By DANTE IONATA

Central High School was closed indefinitely yesterday because of racial disturbances outside the school involving several hundred "black and Italo-American" students.

This characterization of the conflict was drawn yesterday by Dr. Charles M. Bernardo, school superintendent, as he discussed at a news conference the violence which brought about 50 policemen into Hoyle Square and to the Broad-Westminster Street areas to keep stone-throwing gangs of whites and blacks apart.

Several persons, including an assistant school superintendent, a policeman and some students, suffered minor injuries as gangs formed during the morning, moved to close in on each other as police rushed in to disperse them.

A total of about 18 persons, most of them youths, were arrested by police. Three of them were charged. Two juveniles, a 15-year-old Cranston Street girl and a 17-year-old South Providence youth were charged with throwing bricks at policemen.

They were referred to Family Court. Joseph M. Ferreira, 18, of 46 Bishop St., was charged with possession of a dangerous weapon, a bludgeon. Police held him at the station for district court arraignment today.

The disturbances began early in the school day yesterday. By late morning, Central was closed by Louis I. Kramer, assistant school superintendent. Classes were dismissed gradually. Classical High School, which is adjacent to Central and is, with Central, part of the James L. Hanley Educational Center complex, was not affected.

The intensity of the racial animosity stunned school officials. The bitterly controversial and vehemently contested third phase of the Providence desegregation plan—that phase which desegregates high schools—was introduced when schools reopened about three weeks ago. The first weeks of school had been placid.

School officials said yesterday...

day that in September there had been relatively few of the types of complaints that had evolved into racial disturbances in the schools in the past—white students' complaints that blacks extort money from them and assault them, and black students' complaints that whites get preferential treatment and that many high school courses are irrelevant to their needs.

At the news conference yesterday afternoon, Dr. Bernardo sketched out a rough plan which he said he, his staff have devised to ease racial tensions and to reopen the school. He emphasized, however, that the school department does not have a clearly defined plan to resolve the problem.

Dr. Bernardo said that "our basic philosophy is that this is a student level problem and we expect that the students, with our support and leadership, will help resolve those problems before we turn the problem over to adult leadership."

In line with this, Dr. Bernardo said a series of meetings will be held, with black and white students and with school officials to "help resolve the gut-level issues which caused the disruption." The first of these meetings was held last night. Dr. Bernardo refused to divulge which students or officials would participate in these meetings, how the students are to be selected, or where the meetings are to be held.

Dr. Bernardo said he, Charles Mafolani, Central principal and other school department officials met last night for two and a half hours with 15 black and white students who had volunteered to meet with the officials to discuss the school's racial problems.

He said the meeting was held to define the problem and to determine a plan of action to resolve it. Another meeting will be held with the same students today and additional meetings will also be scheduled, Dr. Bernardo said.

Eventually, the superintendent said, it is hoped that these meetings can expand in scope to include the entire student body at Central. He said he will issue a progress report of today's meeting early in the afternoon.

Dr. Bernardo said last night's meeting was "not based on the assumption that the students were necessarily representative of the student body." He added that these 15 students "will be used as an organizing committee" to talk to other students and persuade them to resolve racial animosities.

"True representative groups" of students will evolve from the larger student meetings, he declared. Dr. Bernardo said he hopes that the mass meetings will provide the school administration with an accurate measure of the easing of racial tensions.

Dr. Bernardo said he, Mr. Mafolani and Robert L. Bailey, a special assistant for equal educational opportunities, had met with 10 students at midday yesterday while the disturbances continued. He said eight of the students in the afternoon meeting participated in the night session.

At the afternoon session Dr. Bernardo said students of both races "indicated to us that a terrible thing had happened and they said they will do everything that they can to help us." The afternoon session was arranged by Col. Walter A. McQueeny, police chief.

Dr. Bernardo also said he will meet with the Central High School faculty today to give them his "assessment of the situation" and to tell the faculty "what I intend to do in response to the situation."

The superintendent said "we have received assurances from the mayor and the police chief that we will receive all the necessary support from them during the period that Central is closed.

He also announced that the school department will take legal steps involving suspension and expulsion decisions where it can be clearly determined that students have broken school rules, regulations or the law.

Central will not be reopened, Dr. Bernardo said, "until I feel that the school is ready to resume its educational program." He said the determination that the school can be safely reopened will be made on the basis of student attitudes and their commitment to avoid violence. Dr. Bernardo said he never considered closing other schools.

He emphasized that the school administration will attempt to resolve the difficulties by first working through the students. "Basically, what I am saying is that the kids recognize the problems they are facing," he said. The school administration hopes "to come up with joint solutions with them."

"The students are incapable of solving the problem," he continued, "then the administration will have to move in and make some fundamental decisions." He would not elaborate.

Dr. Bernardo said the problems that surfaced outside Central yesterday were "community based problems, street based problems." He declared that school officials have received no complaints of discrimination by teachers or administrators against one racial group. Nor have complaints been received about the curriculum.

"It's kid on kid, black on white, neighborhood against neighborhood," Dr. Bernardo added.

He also said that "I do not regard this disturbance in any way related to the high school desegregation plan." He declared that this conclusion that the violence is not a result of the desegregation plan is not only his but also the conclusion of all school department administrators.

In explanation of this conclusion, Dr. Bernardo said the key figures in the disturbances would have been assigned to Central had there been no desegregation plan. He said most of these "key figures" live "within walking distance" of the school.

The disturbances amounted to a series of small incidents which continued all morning into the mid afternoon. At noon, a line of 35 helmeted police forced a crowd of about 200 black youths down Winter and Broad Streets. Rocks were thrown and police rushed the group which retreated into a parking lot on Broad Street.

During one of the scuffles outside the school, Mr. Kramer was hit on the head by a rock. He said he did not think it was aimed at him.

Patrolman George J. Martini, 34, who was handling a police dog, suffered a bruise, sprain and possible broken ankle in a melee while trying to separate two groups, police said. Policeman Martini was hit in the ankle by a rock thrown from a group of students.
According to police, as Patrolman Martini fell after being hit, his dog lunged at and bit the youth who allegedly threw the rock. Both the youth and the officer were treated at Rhode Island Hospital.

Central's troubles began yesterday before classes started. About 100 white youths gathered across Hoyte Square from the school before it opened and stayed away from classes. About an hour after classes began, the whites, armed with sticks, headed toward the high school. A few blacks moved toward them. As they closed in on each other a white youth was hit in the head by a rock. Some whites threw sticks at the blacks. Police moved between them and kept them apart. Led by Colonel McQueeney, police momentarily calmed the situation.

About 150 whites then marched to the state house where they sought unsuccessfully to see Governor Licht. They displayed a petition with 200 signatures. The petition said the whites would not return to Central until certain of their demands were met.

At his news conference, Dr. Bernardo said he was not aware of the demands which apparently had not been presented to the school department. They filled around outside the state house; police persuaded them not to enter. They then returned to Central.

As the whites approached Central from behind the City-dzens Savings Bank, a group of blacks ran up Cranston Street toward them. Police with helmets and riot sticks ran up to head off a clash. Two of the policemen had dogs. Large stones were heaved by students.

Blacks crowded around the dogs angrily demanding to know why the dogs were not turned against whites. Students brandished sticks at the dogs. Then the scuffle broke out in which Patrolman Martini was hurt and the youth who allegedly threw the stone at him was bitten. The students charged that the animal had been deliberately set upon the youth.

A 15-year-old girl reported to police that she was attacked by four black girls and a black youth about 11:15 a.m. at Broad and Winter Streets. Police reported she was treated at Rhode Island Hospital. A hospital official said there is no record of her being treated there. She is the daughter of a policeman.

A 15-year-old South Providence youth was treated at the hospital for a sprained hand suffered when he was hit by a rock in the Central courtyard. In the meantime, several white students told police they were assaulted by blacks inside Central.

Dr. Bernardo yesterday praised the police for their handling of the situation. "I would have to commend the police for their response, flexibility, exercise of restraint, and the balanced approach they used in making arrests. Nine of the 18 persons arrested were black, the rest white.

The troubles yesterday appeared to be a spillover from an incident last Friday when about 80 whites walked out of Central for a brief period complaining of fights with blacks and "shakedown" extortions. Friday's walkout was triggered by a fight between black and white students outside the school.

The Black Minister's Conference has scheduled a press conference at 9 a.m. today in the Hood Memorial Zion Church at 148 Wadsworth St. The Rev. Gerry Williams, a conference spokesman, said he will discuss what he and others saw outside Central yesterday and what action they propose.

The Italian American Civil Rights League will discuss the school crisis at its membership meeting tonight at 7:30 in the Kelly-Gazzero American Legion post on Plainfield Street in Cranston.

The Mount Pleasant Parents and Citizens Council, which is contesting the desegregation plan in court, condemned the school department’s "attitude of indifference and neglect" for not hiring civilian security guards to patrol school corridors.

Mrs. John Coughlin, president of the citizens council which has opposed the plan since it was announced last year, said yesterday, "I don’t like to say I told you so" but it was obvious to all that racial tensions would eventually explode into violence.

She criticized school officials for "playing games" with a "very explosive situation" by covering up the racial animosities in the schools. She said racial tensions have been "deliberately downgraded by the school administration and the press."

Superintendent Dr. Bernardo speaks about the incidents at Central High

Video Transcription

Superintendent Dr. Bernardo
We engaged in discussions with students and their contributions were positive. Let me run them down very, very quickly. But, they were concerned with their safety. They were concerned with the equitable application of discipline between the races. They wished to create a student sounding board which would provide for improved communications between students and administration. They were concerned for the creation of a continuing seminar situation which would deal with community problems as a part, and school problems as a part, of the curriculum. We have worked hard with them on in an attempt to implement these recommendations.

Document Analysis

1. According to Dr. Bernardo, what would the students like to see happen at their school?
2. Why do you think the students thought that these aims would help ease racial tensions at the school?
Lesson Follow-up:

1. Based on the newspaper article and film clips, why do you think the students had conflicts with each other, and why do you think they chose the courses of action they did?

2. Whose voices and opinions are not documented in the above article and film clips? Do you think if you had the chance to read or hear their perspectives on the events, it might change your view of the events?

3. What do you want to know more about that might help you better form your opinions about what happened and why it happened?
Lesson 2: Black Students Stage Walk-Out at Hope High School, 1969

On May 9, 1969, 150-200 black students staged a walk out at Hope High School after their principal, Max H. Faxman, refused to discuss a list of grievances they had prepared. In a meeting the following day with school officials, some resolutions were agreed upon, but the meetings came to an impasse over some of the issues. On May 13, students went on what was reported in the media as a “rampage” after negotiations met the impasse. Damage was done to school property. What conclusions can you make based on the primary sources below? What other information about the incident can be gleaned from these sources?

Negroes at Hope High Gain Concessions

Black students at Hope High School won promises of speedier action on their requests for curriculum and other changes yesterday, after about 200 of them walked out of classes.

Representatives of the students met for about two hours with school administrators, including the acting superintendent, Louis I. Kramer.

The students were told that an effort will be made to hold a “crash course in black history and literature” between now and the end of the school year, according to Charles H. Durant 3rd, executive director of the Providence Human Relations Commission. Several other commitments were made.

On Monday, the school will be closed in order to inform the faculty of the decisions reached yesterday. Classes are to resume on Tuesday.

Yesterday’s demonstration was orderly, although the abruptness of the mass meeting created some confusion and apprehension. Many students left the building early and there was very little activity in the school by 1:30 p.m., about an hour before normal closing.

The walkout was prompted by the feeling that there had been too little action on a series of grievances presented to the school’s principal, Max H. Faxman. The walkout came at about 11:45 a.m. Students poured down the stairs and into the auditorium, declaring an unwillingness to speak with anyone other than Mr. Kramer.

A symbolic issue was a set of chains which kept the audi...

Man 1: I think that, I think that they’re going to come out on top.

Interviewer: Who’s going to come out on top, sir?

Man 1: Colored people.

Interviewer: What do you think should be done about it now?

Man 1: That I don’t know. It’s up to the politicians.

Man 2: Seems that uh, the Negroes thought that they weren’t getting treated right, and uh, it’s an unfortunate situation led to uh the other incident where some juveniles were breaking into another school just because of this and I thought it was a pretty bad influence.
Man 3: I think that it was provoked without any justifiable cause of anything that’s happening on the national scene. I think that this was an excuse by hoodlums to run rampant rather than fight for any cause that had any justification. And I think that from what I have read and heard that it was influenced by other factors other than by students themselves.

Man 4: Oh well, as far as I understand is that they had a few problems with teachers and various other problems when things should have been settled um oh, probably years before.

Interviewer: Who do you think is to blame for the crisis that exists there now?

Man 4: Well, I guess maybe the superintendent of schools and maybe the school faculty.

Teacher ‘Racism’ Target

Black Hope Students List Aims

By C. FRASER SMITH

Spokesmen for the dissident black students at Hope High School said last night they will demand dismissal, transfer or suspension of teachers at Hope High School they believe are guilty of racism.

The students said only about 80 of the 150 to 200 black students in the school the day the building was damaged were involved in the vandalism that left more than $10,000 in wreckage in the corridors and classrooms of the East Side high school.

Formal documentation of charges against the teachers is now under way, they said. They declined to discuss details, pending presentation of their case to school authorities.

They said they hope an investigation of these charges will prove that the teachers should not be allowed to remain at Hope.

In an interview that ranged over several crucial elements of the continuing encounter between the blacks and the school, these students said that frustration and an increasing awareness of their black identity generated their demands.

They emphasized that they were not leaders of the 150 to 200 black students who have been pressing openly for change at Hope High for almost a week. But one of them, Wayne Hall, a senior, said he had been chosen as a spokesman. The other two youths asked that their names be withheld.

Each of the three denied that “outside agitators” influenced their actions. They denied that they had come to school on Tuesday with disruption of the school in mind, and they confirmed that a false rumor triggered the vandalism. They outlined their six basic demands:

- Fix schools of racist teachers.
- Give the blacks a chance to make up falling grades in history and English.
- Include black history and black literature in the curriculum and give black students some say in what is read.
- Remove the locks and chains from the doors to the auditorium and other rooms.
- Alteration of summer entrance and credit requirements: in the future, students with year-end averages below 50 will be admitted. No examination will be required of students with a “C” average in summer school courses.
- Free tuition for summer school.

Only the first of these demands remains unresolved, and there appears to be some...

On the question of outside agitation, they said, “They say there was a cat from Brown in there stirring people up. That’s a lie.” Involvement of Brown students was characterized in this way:

“We went to Brown on Saturday night to the Afro House. They wanted to know what it was all about. They said they’d do whatever they could do to help us. They told us to watch our step and not get sold out.”

“We weren’t sure what we wanted. We needed help. (But there) was no influence at all. The only reason they’re (the school department) saying that is to protect Flaxman (Max Flaxman, the school principal)—it looked like he couldn’t handle his students.”

The students also said there was a delegation of students from Central High School in the auditorium.

One of the students also spoke of the developing awareness among black students:

More than a year ago when he asked about introduction of black history at Hope, he was told by a teacher that this would require Polish and Irish history. Since that time, he has had a black history class outside of school.

“What should we have to go to school after school to find out about black people?” he asked. On the question of other minority groups — they’re still white.”

He took great pride in a story he had heard from a brother or sister—only 12 years old—who is at Nathan Bishop Junior High School:

The young student gave one of the school officials a quiz. She asked him to identify several figures in American history: Washington, Lincoln, Franklin. Then she paused and asked him to identify Frederick Douglass, the black abolitionist. The man did not answer, according to the story.

There was also lengthy comment on reports that the students had come to school aiming to rampage:

"We weren't planning on tearing up the school," one of the students said.

At one point, one of the students left negotiations and returned to his black classmates in the auditorium.

"I said 'We got 'em going now. We're going to get our demands,'" he recalled. As he was about to return, he found that the entire student negotiating committee was coming back to the auditorium.

He said later that Acting Supt. Louis I. Kramer had emphatically refused to discuss the possibility of bringing the accused teachers into the conference.

"The way he said it made us feel they didn't want to be bothered with us," one of the students said. Still, at that point, they were talking of new tactics to win this last demand.

Then they learned that two white girls, who had been refused admittance to the auditorium, told the school principal they had been attacked.

"When it hit me, I was so shocked, I wanted to cry. 'What do they want to do to us?' I thought," the student said. He and the others felt they were being framed, he said.

His account of the affair coincides with a report made yesterday by Ms. Kramer. The students were upset, jumped from their seats and moved onto the auditorium stage. There they got sticks and other implements from the stage sets.

"We just figured if we were going to get our heads cracked, we'd hit back.

"The pot was boiling on Friday. It boiled over the weekend and you know what happens when something keeps boiling," one student said.

Repeatedly, these young men emphasized that they were not bent on violence.

"We're trying to gain an education. We're trying to make the white person open up his eyes and let the black man be himself.

"Our purpose is not violence. Our purpose is education. We got to thinking. Just what were we doing? We weren't learning nothin' about ourselves in school," they said.

Interlocking Demands

They stressed the interlocking relationship of these demands:

"What good is that (black history) if there are racist..."
Document Analysis Worksheet

1. What student aims were listed?

2. What incidents were mentioned by the students to show that racism exists at the school?
3. What other important points did the students report on? What emotion(s) did the students report feeling?

Documents 4: Below you will find a historical broadside from 1851 and film clips and articles from both the Hope High and Central High Incidents you learned about in the previous lessons. Please look at these documents as a group. Guiding questions follow each document to aide in your analysis. Final questions will ask you to think about what thread connects these documents as you follow them through time.
CAUTION!!

COLORED PEOPLE
OF BOSTON, ONE & ALL,
You are hereby respectfully CAUTIONED and advised, to avoid conversing with the Watchmen and Police Officers

1. What is the date on this broadside?

2. What was going on in the United States when this broadside was posted? In the North? In the South? Why was this broadside posted in Boston?

3. Explain how this broadside demonstrates that there were tensions between communities of color and the police as an institution at the time of its posting.
Document 4B: Film Clip

An unknown gentleman speaks to the media on May 16, 1969 following the incidents at Hope High School

Video Transcription

Unknown man: We felt that it uh was necessary that police not be visibly in the building or outside of the building you know, but in a normal patrol fashion available to respond immediately if the need arose.

4. In this short clip, what is this gentleman saying about police presence at Hope High School following the damages done by students at the school?

5. Why do you think he felt it was important to make this statement?
Document 4C: Newspaper article clip

Parents and students express concerns at a meeting on October 5, 1971 following the incidents at Central High School.

Black parents and students uniformly condemned the police action outside Central on Monday, because, they said, police were more heavy-handed with blacks than with whites. When white parents asserted that the police are required to maintain security and tranquility, blacks objected because they said police would discriminate against black children.

6. Why are the black parents and students concerned about police presence at Central High School following the student melee?
Mayor Doorley speaks to the media on October 3, 1971 after the incidents at Central High School

Video Transcription

Mayor Doorley: What the school administration’s feeling is let these young people try to work it out themselves, see what the problems are, what are the hang-ups. Uh, the one I commonly hear is that white students are accosted and extorted in the schools. Now what are they going to do about it? I mean um, the last resort, and I say this unequivocally, and this is what the students feel from what I understand, and this is what the administration feels. The last resort is policemen in your schools. That possibly these young people can work out a program where they’ll police themselves.

Another hang-up is that some of the younger black children coming from other areas back into their own area are accosted and assaulted. Now, that’s outside the school building, and I think we’re going to have to increase our patrols. But, here again there’s gotta be some formal way of acting when a black or a white student does something wrong. And, I think that’s what the young people are trying to do. They’re trying to work it out themselves.
7. In this short clip, what is Mayor Doorley saying about police presence at Central High School following the student melee at the school?

8. The mayor is in charge of the police force and is also an official elected by the public. In what ways do you think the words he is choosing to use here are based on his role in society and who might be watching his response on the news?

Synthesizing the documents as a group:

9. In order to synthesize what you have learned from the documents above, first, fill out the Venn Diagram on the next page and then answer the questions that follow. Using the Venn Diagram to organize your thoughts, label one of the circles “Protests at Central High School” and the other “Protests at Hope High School.” List the similarities between the two sets of events and responses that occurred at the two schools in the middle where the circles overlap and the differences in the outer circles.
10. The documents above show that there were concerns about involving the police at both of the student protest events at Central and Hope High Schools. Why was there concern about making sure police involvement was a last resort?

11. Recall the historical broadside you analyzed earlier (document 4A), do you think early historical tensions between communities of color are echoed in the concerns of the black parents and officials when considering the use of police force during the high school conflicts in the 60s/70s? Explain why or why not.

12. Do members of black communities and other communities of color in the United States continue to have similar concerns with the police as an institution today? Provide evidence for your thinking.
13. What relationship(s) does your school have with the local police department? Are there students at your school who believe having a police presence at school is a problem? If yes, what are the problems they cite? Do you agree? Why or why not? If your school does or does not have a relationship with the local police, why do you think that is?
Lesson 3: Students Stage Walk-Out at Brown University, 1968

On December 5, 1968, 65 of the 85 Brown University students of color staged a walk-out in protest of the administration not making progress on a list of demands the students wanted to see the University work towards.

Document 1: Film clip (secondary source)

Watch the mini-documentary linked below and answer the following questions. Fifty Years Ago, Black Students at Brown Walked Out for Change (Note that there is a “CC” button on the video if Closed Captioning is needed)

1. What are some of the issues the students noted in their letter to the Brown University president? Name at least five of the issues described in the video.

2. What is the major demand by the students noted in the video?

3. When was the video compiled?

4. By the time the video was created, had the University reached the goal noted in question 2?
Below are more of the demands students listed in a May 1968 letter to the president of the University from the Afro-American Society, a student organization. Note that at this time, women were not admitted into Brown University but to Brown’s women’s college, Pembroke College. The students of Pembroke and Brown worked together on this initiative.

- That at least 11% of Brown’s entering class be black
- That at least 11% of Pembroke’s entering class be black
- That an interdisciplinary major in African-American studies, consisting of relevant existing courses plus ten new courses
- That ten black professors be hired by February 1969, as a first step toward making at least 11% of the faculty black by September, 1969
- That three black counselor-admissions officers for Brown be hired by September, 1968
- That one black counselor-admissions officer for Pembroke be hired by September, 1968
- That at least 11% of all university employees be black

1. Why was it important to the students that the University make efforts to increase the black student population to 11%?

2. Why was it important to also hire black professors? What about counselors-admissions officers and other staffing positions at Brown?
3. Why do you think students wanted African American Studies courses?

4. What items on the list of demands are similar to what the students at Hope High School were asking for? How about for the students at Central High School? (It has been noted in some reports of the time that Hope High School students met with Brown University students for assistance).

5. Why do the students at Brown and the high schools believe these items are important to the successful education of students of color? In what ways are these items also beneficial for white students?
Lesson 4: Providence Student Union – Activism in the 21st Century

In the early 2000s, students at Hope High School formed a group called Hope United that staged a walk-out in efforts to change the curriculum. Soon, similar student organizations cropped up at other Providence High Schools, including Central High. The organizations merged in 2010 to form the Providence Student Union (PSU), an organization still active today.

Document 1: Providence Student Union Website

On the Providence Student Union website, you will see their Student Bill of Rights

1. What items on the Student Bill of Rights are similar to what the Brown University, Hope High, and Central High students were asking for in the 1960s/70s?

Also on the PSU website, you will see a list of their featured campaigns

2. What are the campaigns that the PSU students have undertaken (list at least five)?
3. Choose one campaign to read more about (excluding the Campaign for Ethnic Studies Classes as we will analyze that in questions below). What types of actions did the students take or are currently taking to strive towards success in their campaign?

4. What tools are available to students in the 21st century to make their voices heard that were not available for students in the 1960s/1970s?

5. Looking specifically at the Campaign for Ethnic Studies Classes, in what ways are what the students asking for here similar or different from what the students at Hope High, Central High, and Brown University had asked for in the 1960s/70s? Use the chart on the next page.

Document 2: Providence Students Say Race is a Big Part of Disconnect with Teachers, Providence Journal, August 16, 2019 Electronic article with accompanying audio clips

1. What problems does this article from 2019 demonstrate are occurring in the Providence High Schools?

2. What issues are similar to the issues students at Hope High had told reporters in the article you read earlier “Black Hope Students List Aims.”
3. If you are in a Providence High School, do you recognize these or similar problems? If you are not at a Providence High School, do you recognize these or similar issues at your school? Does the demographic make-up at your school make a difference in how you perceive these issues? Are these issues still important at schools that have different demographics than the schools noted in these lessons? (To look up the demographics of your high school and/or the Providence High Schools, go to http://www.eride.ri.gov/reports/reports.asp).
Lesson 5: Issues Today. What can you do?

In the lessons in this packet, you read, saw and analyzed documents and films that demonstrate continuous civil rights issues that students have perceived in Providence high schools since the 1960s. In his 2018 oral history interview, James Vincent, president of the Providence Branch of the NAACP, was asked what he believes to be the biggest issues he notices today.

1. Listen to the clip below and think about how what he is saying has been expressed by the students you learned about in the lessons above.

James Vincent Oral History

Oral History Transcript

James Vincent: But in terms of what I think of, and everybody else talks about leveling the playing field...the great equalizer...it’s in education.

Keith Stokes (Interviewer): Yeah

James Vincent: And I think the biggest problem, and we have one of the worst education systems in the country, our state. I think the biggest problem is the fact that, for example in Providence, over 90% of the students are of color, and 80% of the teachers are white. Okay, so if I had to do one thing, it would be to try to figure out how to get more teachers of color in those classrooms. ‘Cause, I think if you get teachers of color in those classrooms, it would make more of a difference than almost anything else you can do.

Keith Stokes: Because of mentorship?
James Vincent: In mentorship and in terms of trying to inspire, in terms of caring, in terms of giving them advice, in terms of the fact that you can go to a Cornell. You don’t have to go to a CCRI. Actually, giving people the idea that that’s possible. You don’t have any teachers doing that because they all live in... well, I don’t want to get into that.

Keith Stokes: No, but I understand.

James Vincent: Too many of them I think are disconnected because too many of them live in the suburbs, and too many of them are not, are not culturally competent.

Keith Stokes: Yeah, and now with the rise of Asian and Latino kids and such...and, absolutely.

James Vincent: So, so, I think if I had to do one thing...you’ve gotta get more black and brown teachers in those classrooms, black and brown teachers in terms of guidance, black and brown teachers in terms of principals, ah, on the school committees. You know, the gamut. But, if I had to focus on one thing among that, it’s the teachers.

2. Think about this and other civil rights issues that you notice are yet unresolved in your school or in our society. In a group or individually, use the space below to make a list of what you think are the most important problems facing Americans today (these can be problems that impact you directly, you see in your community, or that are facing the whole country). List at least four issues.
3. Pick one problem from the list you created above. Use this space to brainstorm some ways that you might address, or fight back against, this problem.
4. Pick one of the ways you listed above to address the issue. Make an action plan with step by step instructions to implement this solution and address the problem. (Consider how you will bring attention to the problem, how you could fundraise (if the solution involves money), who you can reach out to help you reach a solution, etc.)

About this Project

The Rhode Island Historical Society, in partnership with the Rhode Island Black Heritage Society and the Rhode Island Historical Preservation and Heritage Commission, was awarded a grant from the National Park Service for a multi-phase project on African Americans’ Struggle for Civil Rights in Rhode Island: The 20th Century. The project consisted of conducting archival research, collecting oral histories, and documenting places of significance to Civil Rights in Rhode Island. Public exhibits and school unit plans were also created thanks to this grant. This grant was completed over the course of three years, 2017-2020.
